Jobbie Nooner May Be No More, Police Say

Event Has Neighbors, Law Enforcement On Guard

CLAY TOWNSHIP, Mich.-- Law enforcement officials are threatening to crack down on a raucous party, which is infamous for drunken behavior and indecent exposure.

The party is called the Jobbie Nooner. It's an annual event that usually takes place in June on Gull Island. This year, participants wanted to hold a second one. It is to take place

Saturday. Law enforcement officials warn that if participants don't cooperate with their guidelines, this party might be the last. The Army Corps of Engineers manages Gull Island.

The corps is requiring that lanes around the island be left open for officers and emergency crews during the parties. Helicopters and video cameras will monitor those who drink and drive. Those taped breaking the law will face prosecution.

Most often, police complain of instances of drunken driving and boating, assault, indecent exposure, drug use, and drug sales.

The Jobbie Nooner originated with a group of autoworkers, called jobbies, who skipped work to have fun on the lake.
